David seems to be your typical first-time owner. The house is small, money is scarce. But his family is happy. It was our dream. he said. So it was like our dream finally came true. But getting a loan from the bank almost didn't happen. A bank employee called and said they apparently have a problem. The problem was David's Social Security number... It's a fake. He's undocumented, an illegal immigrant. David thought it was a dead end, but not in California. It is among several states where banks offer mortgages to people who know they are illegal. David got a 30-year loan, $135,000. He pays $950 a month for his home in the South Valley.The Valley non-profit group Acorn is helping people like David. They set him up with Citibank in Fresno, where a Social Security number is not required. Instead, it requires an individual taxpayer identification number or I-TIN. Prove I'm paying taxes to the IRS. Applicants must also have a bank account, proof of u.S. for two years, and two years of credit references. Diana Hull, an illegal immigrant opponent and president of a group called Californians for stabilizing the population says against the law. There is a law against helping and helping illegal aliens to continue living in the United States. Issuing a mortgage to an illegal alien helps him to settle and United States, which is clearly illegal. It's a felony, she says. Despite allegations that what they're doing is illegal, Citigroup and Acorn support the program. Acorn issued a statement saying everything about their program is legal. It is said that in the United States, it is perfectly legal for non-citizens to own property. When asked about his opinion as to whether the program is indeed legal, or illegally tempts illegal immigrants to stay, the U.S. attorney's office declined an answer. The attorney general refused to answer a question about whether or not the practice is illegal?! What kind of nonsense is that? That's how I see it. There is nothing illegal about foreigners owning property in the U.S., but it's a totally different matter when they lie about their status, lie about illegally earned income, and lie about their busy status owner in order to get a lower rate. Then again, they're going to occupy that house, so who cares if they do this in a legal or illegal way? Of course, not Citicorp, which is more than happy to process the loan sell it for a fee to Fannie Mae. As long as someone can make money on these loans no one really cares if they are supporting and aiding illegal aliens or not. Here's the bottom line. Money speaks louder than principles. The U.S. Attorney General is a jerk. Unless there is a great tightening of our borders, illegal aliens will come up with pouring in. Neither Democrats nor Republicans have the backbone to deal with this problem right now. The problem is likely to boil until one of the two things happens: 1) there is a massive public protest against illegal immigration over jobs 2) some kind of disaster happens such terrorists slip over our porous, poorly guarded border and cause some kind of huge problem somewhere. Mike Shedlock / Mish/ The social and political structure of the New England colonies was shaped primarily by the harsh geography and strict Puritan religion of the first English settlers who settled there. Despite its apparent handicaps, this region prospered, becoming a trading power among the North American colonies. The early settlers of New England found that agriculture beyond basic subsistence agriculture was almost impossible in the rocky and cold environment. However, the forests of New England were thick, with tall, straight trees, and the nearby ocean was full of fish. It was a natural development to build sawmills on new England's abundant and fast rivers to craft planks, primarily for export to England and later to supply the growing shipbuilding industry. Some of the best ships on the Atlantic were built in New England shipyards. Structure of the original new England settlers contributed to the mercantile success of the region. The puritan's focus on good education and hard work ensured an ideal pool of workers for a strong, successful business base and also created a literacy class that wrote most of the basic American literature during this period. Regular meetings of church elders the traditional meeting of the city of New England as society gradually secularized. These meetings still form the core of New England government since 2014. Verywell/Bailey Mariner Children and adolescents withdrawn socially may be shown signs of depression. Although it is normal for a child to start to withdraw from their parents and identify more with colleagues as they reach adolescence, social withdrawal from friends and colleagues can be a sign of something more serious. Learn to spot indicator signs that indicate a child or teenager is depressed and what you can do to help. Children who are depressed can feel misunderstood, irascible, worthless or hopeless. They may feel that no one can understand or help them – so why should they bother to keep or make friends? Having friends to talk and trust in is considered to be very emotionally helpful, especially for those suffering from depression. Without social relationships, some children and adolescents may begin to feel alone and isolated, two factors often associated with increased risk of suicide. In addition, depressed children may not have the ability to experience pleasure in social activities, such as school, group activities or social trips. So you could avoid these situations. Social withdrawal is not limited to depression and is believed to be also associated with other disorders, such as anxiety, schizophrenia and certain personality disorders. In addition, social withdrawal has been shown to be a good indicator of major depressive disorder (MDD) in children with co-existing attention deficit/hyperactivity disorders (ADHD), according to a study that attempted to distinguish which symptoms best discriminate cases of MDD in children with attention deficit disorders. As children navigate in childhood and adolescence, they are likely to hit some bumps in the road, and parents and caregivers are often left wondering what is normal and when they should intervene. First, talk to your kid. Maybe they had an argument with a friend or it's mourning the loss of a relationship by keeping it to themselves for a few days. This can be a temporary and normal reaction to an unpleasant event. Maybe facing another conflict at school, would be being harassed. They may have been removed from the previous social group. Such situations may explain why your child appears to be socially withdrawn. If your child's social withdrawal lasts more than two weeks, however, talk to your child's pediatrician or other mental health providers for an assessment and treatment options. Contact a healthcare provider earlier if their symptoms escalate or experience: Additional symptoms of depressionLearning thoughts or self-harm or suicideInability to engage in normal daily functions or activities If your child is depressed, an effective treatment plan can help them get them on the road to enjoying their childhood and those around them. Do not delay treatment. Give your child must maintain good mental health. Thanks for your feedback! What are your concerns?
